DISCOVER

HOW IT WORKS

Built in 1888, rising 500ft on 862ft of steep track with a gradient of 57%

Discover how the two cars, connected by hauling cables, operate on a simple balancing principle.

Water from the West Lyn River fills the 700 gallon tank of the top ‘docked’ passenger car. Water from the lower car is then discharged until the heavier top car descends and pulls the lower car up the incline.

Speed is controlled by each driver using the Deadman’s Handle, a braking system engineered and patented for this railway in 1888, and the 19th century forerunner of modern train braking systems.
